

Thank you for your interest in learning more about the Network of Jewish Human Service Agencies!

Established in 2017 by two predecessor organizations, the Association of Jewish Family and Children's Agencies and the International Association of Jewish Vocational Service Agencies, the Network is building upon the leadership foundation established by both AJFCA and IAJVS and has quickly become the voice for the Jewish human service sector.

As an international membership association, the Network today includes member agency representation from throughout the United States, Canada and Israel. With over 140 member agencies, and growing, who together provide comprehensive human services for the Jewish community and beyond, Network member agencies have established a continuum of care addressing complex and changing needs, including healthcare, career, employment and mental health services, as well as services for youth, families and caregivers, seniors, Holocaust survivors, immigrants and refugees and persons with disabilities.

The Network has established four core pillars which guide its service delivery; advocacy, innovation, best practices and collaboration. Through its Center for Innovation and Research, the Network works with its member agencies to identify innovative responses to challenges and establishes partnerships with corporations, government, foundations, philanthropists and universities. An extensive and growing set of member agency benefits address internal operating, governance or client service delivery needs. And central to its many offerings, the Network is first and foremost a forum for professional and volunteer development and a guiding source for collective efforts which advance the scope and impact of the Jewish human service sector.

The enclosed material will provide additional background on the Network and its offerings. Please take a moment to consider how you and your agency can both benefit and help to build the Network and the broader Jewish human service sector.

We look forward to having your partnership in our efforts!
